

1.2) Conflicts of people within the country Recent political developments in Thailand have led Thai society to evolve into a political culture in which the people want to participate in decision-making in the state's policies, especially the distribution of wealth and the power to manage important resources.

by the people to express themselves by exercising their political rights and civil liberties in elections and the protection of their rights or the rights of local communities. While Thai society is It is in the process of structural changes in the economy, society and politics, with structural problems still present. From economic and social inequality, access to natural resources, corruption problems and inefficient government administration