

1.4) Distrust in the administration of the country according to the rule of law Thailand still has problems structure that is not conducive to the rule of law distrust in the administration of the country and crises in the faith of the leaders, including the political and administrative structures which, despite being more decentralized, but overall still has a centralized nature of power It is a limitation to the participation of various sectors in society together with corruption. in the public sector expanding at all levels resulting in public distrust At the same time, some people Accept the process of corruption for personal gain. As a result, the problem has eroded the moral foundation. social ethics